THE WATER SPOUT,

Is an extraordinary appearance on the surface of the Sea, consisting of a large mass of water rising up and forming a sort of column, and moving with great swiftness. The spout has sometimes the appearance of a speaking trumpet, the small end downwards, and reaching to the Sea, and the big end going off in a black thick cloud. When it falls the sprays of it rise to a great height. It will sometimes continue whole about a minute.

Spring.

When winter is quite over, spring will come again. O spring is very pleasant! there will be daisies, and cowslips, and a great many pretty flowers, there will be blossoms and green leaves upon the trees, and there will be pretty cows, and young lambs, and chickens, and goslings. The birds will sing sweetly; and they will be very busy picking up bits of hay and moss, and wool, to build their nests with, and the cuckoo will sing cuckoo, cuckoo. The days will be longer than they are in winter, and the weather will be warmer.

Natural History. The Lion.

The outward form of the Lion seems to speak the superiority of his internal qualities. His figure is striking, his look confident and bold, his gait proud, and his voice terrible. He is in every respect compact and well-proportioned, a perfect model of strength joined with agility.

The Cruel Turk.
